Old-world Charm

Singapore

Chic wine café in Asia serves old-world wines by the glass

The debate over old-world wines and new continues to divide drinkers.

Each insists their technique and the terroir, or French for environment, result in much better tasting wines.

The former created based on its climate and culture, while the latter traded some tradition with technology.

Grain Alley has a romantic reason for serving wines from the old-world instead; besides them pairing better with their comfort food.

They believe in the charm of centuries-old customs, the feeling as one drinks the vintage, you're soaking in its heritage as well.

Their wine list contains an unusual choice of three house reds and three house whites, as most places serve only one type of each.

There are 45 other wines from 24 grape varieties across 20 regions around the Mediterranean to drink from.

"This list took us more than half a year to complete," said Qing, one of the owners.

"From quasi surveys to speaking with sommeliers to sourcing the right suppliers, and we'll be refreshing it every season with more rated wines as well."

Grain Alley's wine menu is styled not by location but based on the Latin saying: omne trium perfectum or everything that comes in threes are perfect.

Their menu lists a range of three prices across the different grape varieties, to simplify choosing for customers, and most wines are available by the glass too.

"Wine drinkers want to expose their palates to as many grape-types from as many places as possible, but it can get rather pricey to drink from even just two bottles."

"We hope to magically transport our customers to the edge of the Mediterranean, to drink as many different old-world wines by the glass as they'd like, while seated at a wine café right here in Asia," she muses.

AUTUMN'22

Our wine list is seasonally updated and carefully curated to contain celebrated wines only from countries in the Mediterranean, and while it's focused mainly on wines rated by decorated wine connoisseurs and masters of wine, it includes selections from other wineries based on their fine tradition and great reputation of winemaking too – which now everyone can enjoy by the glass.
