DESCRIPTION FOR CUSTOMISED MARTINI

The classic martini was created as a gin cocktail, so for those interested in having the traditional martini experience, give gin a try. "Each gin you try will have a distinct flavour" - different brands of gin are made using different botanicals, hence they all taste unique. If the herbacious flavour of the gin proves too strong for you, order a vodka martini instead.

What's The Difference In Vermouth?

Vermouth is a type of wine that's flavoured with botanicals.

Dolin: The brightest & most citrusy vermouth. Tends to produce fairly clean-tasting martinis.

Noilly: By far the briniest. Martinis made with Noilly tends to taste so much like olives, that some tasters suspected they were actually "dirty."

Martini: The most neutral. This one allows the flavours in the gin to shine through clearly.

Bitters

Bitters are an aromatic mix of spices, herbs, roots and plants that are mixed with alcohol. When added to cocktails, bitters can give drinks more character and depth. They can subtly change the flavour of a cocktail and give it a deeper taste, adding an intriguing touch. Like a pinch of cinnamon in a pie or a dash of salt to season a dish, a small amount of bitters can make a big difference.

Shaken or Stirred?

A shaken martini will be noticeably colder, but will also cut its alcohol potency almost in half.

Very Dry Martini, Dry Martini, Medium Dry Martini or Wet Martini?

Ironically, a wet martini actually means adding more dry vermouth.

A dry martini will call for the normal amount of dry vermouth.

What is Dirty / Very Dirty Martini?

A dirty martini takes the classic martini recipe (gin or vodka, your choice), muddles olives & simply adds a little olive brine. A very dirty martini would include the bits & pieces of the olives within the drink itself.
