When it comes to the soup, we brew our own stock. Over a couple of days, we extract the flavour from the main ingredients to form the base of each dish.

This gives us the ability to achieve the natural flavours without the use of deadly chemicals and artificial flavours.

That's right! No MSG! With the added herbs and other ingredients, we had created a fusion that allows you to taste the different layers of flavour with each bite.

South Vietnam is home to the Mekong Delta (also known as the Nine Headed Dragon River “Cửu Long”) with rice paddocks that spread across the land.

These grains attract the natural wildlife, particularly the ducks.

With millions of ducks arriving annually, there are plenty for the locals to dine upon.

It is no wonder the Vietnamese are well renown for their duck cuisine

Geographically, Vietnam is quite unique with its landscape differing from the North and South.

North Vietnam has a wider area of land, allowing for the cultivation of animals, the reason why their meals is centred around meat and sauces.

South Vietnam, which although doesn't have as big of land, is home to the Mekong Delta.

Thus, their food is more centred around seafood.

Naturally, you would think they would taste very different, and that would be correct.

However, both regions are still part of the same nation, so even if the styles are very distinct, you can tell they came from the same origin and principles of preparations.

Try out both our Northern and Southern Style Dinners to see if you can taste the similarities and differences and to see which you prefer overall.

The de'gustations in our restaurant are carefully selected to complement each other.

This is to ensure the balance of Ying and Yang of the meal, an essential principle of Vietnamese dining.

This balance would highlight and heighten the flavour of the meals allowing it to be further enjoyed.

These de'gustations are of a French style, meaning that each dish will be individually served separately and are not for sharing.

This is to tap into Vietnam's French history by emulating the high dining service of that time. We hope you enjoy our selections.
